

PPL Foundation Helping People and Communities in Pocono Region

More than $100,000 will be donated to groups serving the area

Stream quality and sustainable energy education are two Pocono region initiatives funded this year by the PPL Foundation.

The Brodhead Watershed Association will receive $3,000 toward the operation of its Adopt-A-Stream program so more than 70 volunteers can continue to conduct data collection on local waters.

The Pocono Environmental Education Center, Dingmans Ferry, will receive $5,000 to provide educational programs regarding renewable energy, sustainable energy technologies and sustainable energy design to more than 1,000 students between the ages of eight and 17, mostly from northeastern Pennsylvania.

“Improving the quality of life in our communities is an important goal, and these two grants support that,” said Alana Roberts, regional affairs director for PPL Electric Utilities. “We’re glad to be able to support those who care about the environment.”

The awards announced today (6/28) will support a variety of projects in PPL Foundation’s focus areas: education, workforce development and community revitalization. The Foundation’s Sustaining Grants, ranging from $1,000 to $25,000 each, provide organizations with funding for specific projects or general operating funds.

In addition to the grants for the watershed group and education center, other initiatives and projects in northeast Pennsylvania that received support through the PPL Foundation Sustaining Grant program include:

- Lacawac Sanctuary received a $6,000 grant to support its Youth Engaging Science (YES) program.
- CAN DO Foundation, Hazleton received a $20,000 grant to help fund a small-business incubator in downtown Hazleton.
- United Way of Greater Hazleton received $15,000 to partner with the Dolly Parton Imagination Library. The library program provides enrolled children with one free book each month from birth to age 5.
- Wilkes University Institute for Public Policy and Economic Development received $10,000 for research on important issues ranging from community revitalization to education and social services.
- Diamond City Partnership, Wilkes-Barre received a $5,500 to support the group’s downtown retail recruitment initiative.
- Pennsylvania Envirothon received $8,000 for its events organized in cooperation with county conservation districts.

In addition, grants went to the organizations below for the listed mission or program:

- Upper Delaware Preservation Coalition ($3,000) — Delaware River Sojourn Project
- Honesdale Communities That Care ($1,000) — Academic assistance for underprivileged children
- Catholic Social Services, Diocese of Scranton ($1,000) — Big Brothers Big Sisters in Monroe County
