PPL Foundation awards Pennsylvania nonprofits grants to improve education, promote development of sustainable communities

An ambulance bus that will allow emergency response teams to better serve rural communities, the transformation of a blighted property into a social services hub, an early learning center in the heart of downtown Allentown and an environmental workforce development program are a few of the innovative programs the PPL Foundation is supporting through major grants in 2018.

The PPL Foundation on Monday (11/12) announced a combined $585,000 in grants to 13 nonprofit organizations.

PPL's support is helping organizations fulfill their missions across the company's 29-county service territory in Central and Eastern Pennsylvania.

"The PPL Foundation is proud to team up with nonprofit organizations throughout Pennsylvania that are tackling tough issues in our communities with innovative solutions," said Ryan Hill, president of the PPL Foundation. "They are working every day to make our communities safe, strong and sustainable by expanding access to high-quality, pre-k education, sparking students' interest in new and exciting career paths and providing the resources people need to move out of poverty."

The awards announced today will support a variety of projects in PPL Foundation's focus areas of education and sustainable communities.
