ALLENTOWN, Pa.

PPL Electric Utilities, continuing its tradition of community involvement, has awarded more than $60,000 in grants to regional and local economic development organizations in support of their efforts to attract new jobs to eastern and central Pennsylvania.

Through its Blue Ribbon Marketing Partnership Program, PPL Electric Utilities is presenting a total of 17 grants to 13 organizations in its 29- county service area. Individual grant amounts ranged from $2,000 to $6,000. Added to a first round of grants awarded earlier this year, PPL Electric Utilities has provided more than $110,000 in funding for economic development projects in its service area in 2003.

"PPL believes that support for community and economic development is not only good for our business but also the right way to do business. Through our partnership approach to economic development, we try to provide a level of support that enables regional and local organizations to do what they do best," said Donald M. Bernhard, manager of Community and Economic Development for PPL Electric Utilities.

"Blue Ribbon grants represent a funding source for programs that we believe will market the area effectively in the fiercely competitive business of economic development," he said. "Organizations will be able to leverage the dollars from PPL Electric Utilities to attract additional funding for their projects."

Economic development grants that PPL Electric Utilities awarded went to:

- Greater Wilkes-Barre Chamber of Business and Industry, two grants totaling $6,000 to develop a workforce development brochure for all of northeastern Pennsylvania and to conduct a direct-mail campaign to attract high-technology businesses to northeastern Pennsylvania.
- Scranton Plan, $3,000 to support a marketing event that introduces corporate executives, real estate brokers and site selection specialists to the area.
- Wayne County Economic Development Corporation, $5,000 for Web site design.
